I'd recommend starting with a free trial version of Photoshop and printing the output to see what you think. By actually examining the output of your Photoshop projects, you'll have a clearer understanding of which version of Photoshop you prefer. Photoshop is a tool that can easily be mastered, and if you learn it really well, then you'll have a solid foundation for your future graphic arts work. Adobe PhotoShop Elements is designed as a mass-market version of Photoshop. It incorporates some of the same features as its more expensive sibling but is much less expensive and therefore easier to try out. You can make basic image manipulations with Elements and export your output, and if it meets your needs, you can purchase it and continue on to Photoshop. Applying Photoshop Elements tricks Use the following list to get you started in your editing, and, if you feel like it, you can go back to it for your first Photoshop project after you get used to a few common features: 1. Text and fonts You can easily edit text with Photoshop Elements. You can use the Type tool, shown in Figure 14-1, to select text and change the font. 2. Layer styles You may be able to edit layer styles as well, but the general rule is that layers must be kept solid — meaning that none of them can be transparent. Also, any changes made to a layer's style (such as adding a layer style, changing the style's settings, or removing it) can only be changed on the layer's original copy. You can remove layers and add new layers at any time, but you can't change the settings or style of a layer on a different copy of the layer. 3. Crop and rotate A great first step for novice users is to crop an image. You can use the Crop tool. You can also rotate an image, but you must use the Rotate tool, shown in Figure 14-2, which does a great job and is more accurate than the Rotate tool in the other programs. You can also use these tools to resize images. You can apply these changes to individual layers or to all layers in an image. **Figure 14-1:** Use the Type tool to change the font for the text in this image. **Figure 14-2:** The Rotate tool enables you to rotate an image to any angle, and the Crop tool enables you to crop an image to any aspect ratio

The proportion of US netbooks in shipments in the second quarter of 2011 was 80 per cent, according to a report by research firm ABI Research. By January 2011 the proportion of netbooks in shipments had fallen to 50 per cent. The report found that in 2011, the netbook market is expected to be fairly consistent, with US netbook shipments to the end of the year down to 15 million units. The report said that: "Netbooks are likely to be the top-selling small personal computers (PCs) in 2011, as low-cost products with powerful processors and low-cost hard drives are appealing to consumers. Meanwhile, desktop-replacement devices are only set to increase their presence in the market this year and beyond, with shipments of devices more powerful than netbooks likely to outpace those of the former in the coming years. Despite two major setbacks for netbooks last year, as a result of an overheating issue and reduced product availability, the research firm believes that key netbook PC vendors will manage to recover by strengthening their market position. For example, Acer, HP, Toshiba and Dell are expected to rebound from challenging 2011 by offering significantly improved and upgraded products in 2012. New netbook models are expected to be launched by such vendors that until now have remained largely quiet on the netbook market. The research firm expects that even as the netbook market recovers in 2012, netbooks may not achieve very large volumes. It noted that certain market segments are still more likely to gravitate toward tablets or smartphones. "In our view, the netbook category is maturing, and many consumers will grow tired of netbooks' limited battery life, small screens and fixed prices that cannot sustain their popularity. They will move on to more capable PC devices, which are likely to remain the dominant form of personal computing device in 2012," said Roger Kay, principal analyst at ABI Research. ABI Research expects that the global PC industry is expected to total US$279.5 billion in 2011, with the combined market for PCs, netbooks and tablets accounting for approximately US$44.4 billion and

Melanie's Story Melanie's Story I am a 25-year-old woman from Portland, Oregon. I went to the JUUL shop in my neighborhood and started toying with this new product. Then, in just two days, I was smoking it every day on the way to and from work. Then, within a month, I was smoking it at home and sneaking it into work to do it. I wanted it so badly. I loved it. The first time I smoked the JUUL I was twenty-four years old and I was very nervous about using it, but I wanted it so badly. I was really happy and proud of myself for quitting smoking, and I wanted to keep my smoking secret. I didn't want my partner to know that I smoked or that I was using a new product, so I decided to buy the JUUL in the morning and hide it in my pocket and smoke it in the afternoon when I was at work. I would never let him see me smoking it and I didn't want him to know I was buying it on the sly. I got away with it for many months. I would sit down at work in the afternoon and smoke a JUUL right under my partner's nose. He never knew I was smoking. He was happy when I was happy and saddened when I was sad. I was very careful about the cigarettes I smoked in my early years. I was always in control of the cigarette and I would always smoke in a clean area and smoke only one pack a day. I used to have great pride about my smoking, but as time went on, I got into the habit of smoking the JUUL at home and hiding it at work. The "purity" of the product was extremely attractive to me and I thought the JUUL would help me quit smoking. I really felt like I had a problem I needed to overcome, but I had to be careful not to get caught. I was really into it and I had to keep it a secret, but I just couldn't stop. I wanted it so badly. I didn't want my partner to know that I was smoking. I felt guilty about it, but I wanted to keep it a secret. After a couple of months of hiding my JUUL every day at work, I got caught. I was so relieved to be able to tell my partner that I didn't have to go
